Open Access Anticoagulant Clinics

This leaflet explains more about open access anticoagulant clinics. If you have any further questions, please speak to a doctor or nurse caring for you.

What are open access anticoagulant clinics?
You can come to these clinics for a blood test for warfarin control at a date and time to suit you within a certain week. This will mean that you no longer need to regularly attend the standard anticoagulation clinic at St George’s Hospital, although we will continue to be responsible for dosing your warfarin.

Who can attend the clinics?
To attend the clinics you must:

- have a telephone number and be able to understand instructions given over the telephone
- be able to read English
- have a permanent address.

What happens at the clinics?
When you receive your appointment you will be given a date. You can come to an open access anticoagulant clinic any day that week, Monday to Friday (times vary and are given below).

We will take blood by pricking your finger or by taking a sample from a vein in your arm. The blood sample or test result is sent with your yellow book to St George’s Hospital so dosing can be done by the anticoagulant nurses. If you need to make significant dose changes we will telephone you that day.

You will not have to wait at the clinic for your yellow book to be returned. The book will usually be posted back the same day by first class post. You should check the dosing in your yellow book when you receive it in case your dose has been changed.

Please note:
If you have a finger prick blood test and the international normalised ratio (INR) blood test result is high, you may need a second sample taken from a vein in your arm (a venous blood test). If you have bleeding or bruising you may be asked to wait for the venous blood test result in case you need medical treatment.
If your GP or consultant has asked for other blood tests, the INR blood test will be taken from the arm.

You should keep an old yellow book or a copy of your most recent results and dosing with you while your current yellow book is being processed in case of emergency.

What do I do if I need to see a doctor or nurse?

You may be asked to attend the standard clinic to see a doctor or nurse if:

- you have recently been an inpatient
- you are due to have surgery or another hospital procedure that means your anticoagulation needs to be adjusted
- you have bleeding or bruising
- you need to be reviewed by the doctor or sister
- your anticoagulant control is unstable.
If this happens, contact the anticoagulant clinic using the details below and ask for an appointment at the standard clinic.

What do I need to tell the clinic about?
Please let the clinic know immediately if you:
- change your address or telephone number
- change your medications including herbal or alternative medications
- have any bleeding or bruising
- cannot attend your appointment
- are about to have any surgical, dental or other invasive procedure.
