

Red Cell Pain Management and Psychology Service

This leaflet explains more about the specialist pain self-management and psychology service for people with sickle cell disease and thalassaemia. If you have any further questions, please speak to one of the Red Cell team.

What is the Red Cell Pain Management and Psychology Service (RCPMPS)?

The RCPMPS is a service for people living with sickle cell disease or thalassaemia. The service is run by clinical psychologists and a specialist physiotherapist, who work closely with your haematology team.

There are two parts to the service: Pain Management and Psychology.

Pain Management

The specialist team has expertise in supporting people living with persistent pain thought to be related to their sickle cell disease or thalassaemia. Persistent pain is pain that you have regularly for longer than six months. It may also be called 'chronic' or 'everyday' pain.

There are several pain management services available, including:

- Individual appointments - with psychology and/or physiotherapy to help you work towards your pain management goals, such as returning to valued activity or reducing mood difficulties associated with pain.
- Movement group – a chance to try out some gentle exercise in a group and get advice from a physiotherapist about exercising safely with sickle cell disease/thalassaemia. You can attend occasionally or regularly, whichever suits you best.
- Pain Management Programme – a more in-depth group programme which runs one day a week for eight weeks. The programme aims to help you develop additional ways to manage your pain and reduce the impact on your life. The weekly sessions provide an opportunity for discussion and to try out the exercises and strategies that we discuss. For more information, please see the leaflet Breaking the Cycle: A Red Cell Pain Management Programme for people with sickle cell disease or thalassaemia.
- Red Cell pain clinic – a doctor with experience in managing persistent pain (Consultant in Pain Medicine) will assess your pain and review your medication. You will decide with the doctor if any treatment changes would be helpful.

We think of our patients as the experts in their condition and hope that by working together we can help those living with persistent pain to reduce the impact on their emotional and physical well-being and carry on with the activities that are important to them.

Psychology service

The Psychologists in the RCPMPS seek to support you in coping with the multiple challenges that can come with living with sickle cell or thalassaemia. Speaking to a Psychologist can offer an opportunity to discuss the impact that your condition has on your quality of life.

Some of the most common areas that people choose to speak with us about include:

- Managing the impact that a long-term condition has on you
- Coping with hospital admissions
- Communicating with others about your condition.

The Psychologist will meet with you for a first appointment to discuss what you feel you would like support with. Psychological support is usually offered as one to one sessions with the Psychologist.

The RCPMPS also offer a Red Cell Condition support group, which is an informal opportunity to speak about your experiences of living with sickle cell disease or thalassaemia, alongside others also living with Red Cell conditions. This is a monthly group and you can attend as often as you would find helpful.

If you are interested in any of the above options offered by the service, you can arrange to meet us for an initial assessment.

Who can attend the service?

Anybody who is currently being seen by the St George's University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust haemoglobinopathies team can be referred, or self-refer, to our services. Please speak with your team about a referral or contact us via the details below to make an initial appointment.

We do accept referrals from other hospitals as we are a very specialised service. If you receive your care at another hospital, then please ask your haematologist or GP if they will refer you to the service.

Where do I need to go?

Sessions take place remotely, and/or face to face at the Phoenix Centre on the perimeter road at St George's Hospital. See the website for a map or let us know if you need one.

Patient transport can usually be provided if you are eligible for this (you can call transport assessment and booking on 020 8725 0808) and there is blue badge parking near the Phoenix Centre. Please see the trust website for information on parking and travel by public transport.

Does it cost anything?

There is no charge for attending appointments with the service.

What do I need to bring with me?

You don't need to bring anything. You should wear comfortable clothes if you are attending the movement group.

Is there anything else to know?

We are a small service with limited numbers of appointments. If you do not come for your appointment and you don't let us know beforehand, it is much harder for us to give you and others, a good service. Please let us know if you cannot make your appointment.

If we meet with you for an individual appointment, we will write a summary letter and send it to you, your haematology consultant and your GP. If you have concerns about this, please discuss this with us.

You can find out more about our service by visiting our YouTube channel. Search 'red cell pain management service' on YouTube to find our channel.

We work closely with the rest of the red cell haematology team at St George's Hospital and we will share relevant clinical information with the rest of the team when it might be useful for your medical care. Other than the letters mentioned above, information will not be shared outside the team unless there is a risk of harm to yourself or others. If you have any questions or concerns about confidentiality, please discuss them with us.
