

Isolated Finger Joint Exercises

This leaflet explains more about isolated finger joint exercises for patients with hand or finger injuries under the care of the St George's Hospital hand therapy team.

Why should I do isolated finger joint exercises?

You have two tendons in your finger which make it bend. Isolated exercises work each tendon individually.

Please ensure that you only exercise as instructed by your therapist. If you have any further questions, please speak to your therapist.

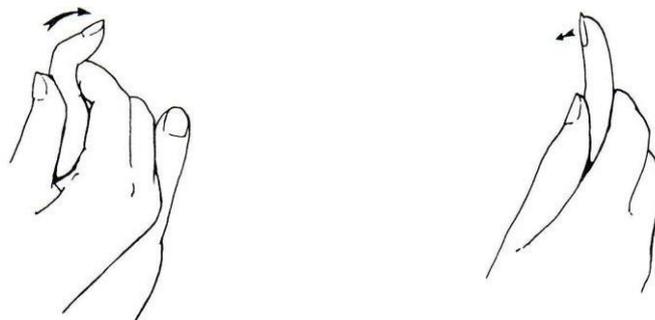

How often should I do my exercises?

These exercises should be done _____ times each. You should hold each position for _____ seconds. Repeat these exercises _____ times per day.

What exercises should I do?

Exercise one

Hold the affected finger firmly at the middle joint so that only the tip joint can move. Bend the tip joint down as far as possible. Gently bring the tip joint back into a straight position.

Exercise two

Hold the base of the finger using the other hand, so that the tip and middle joints are free. Bend the middle joint as far as possible. Then straighten the middle joint.
